

What Works in Sex Offender Management of Persons with Intellectual Disabilities

James Haaven, M.A.

In the last few years there has been a significant increase in publications on clinical methods and research related to sex offender management of persons with intellectual disabilities. This workshop will present this “what works” literature in managing, treating and supervising this population. Specific program components to provide effective sex offender management will be outlined. Particular attention will be given to current approaches in measuring treatment progress and providing ongoing risk assessment and management.
